WISCONSIN STATUTORY CITATIONS RELATING TO METHODS
OF MEASURING POPULATION IN POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS OF WISCONSIN

INTRODUCTION

This project was undertaken to fill a need for an enumeration of the statutory provisions in the Wisconsin Statutes relating to population. It is an attempt to locate every citation bearing on any method of measuring population.

While Wisconsin is a general law state meaning that it is a state in which special laws for particular communities are not enacted, classification has crept into the law whereby only those local units of government of a particular size are included within the provisions of that particular statute. Section 31 of Article IV of the State Constitution prohibits any special or private law "for incorporating any city, town or village, or to amend the charter thereof."

It is generally accepted that classification of cities is permitted when reasonable, and in line with this thinking. Section 62.05 of the statutes created 4 classes of cities according to population.

The study reveals more than 100 variations in the manner of expressing population classifications scattered through more than 100 chapters of the statutes. While many of these are necessary, it is apparent that some greater uniformity could be established. For example, the first 5 categories include:

- Counties over 500,000
- Counties with 500,000 or more
- Counties of 500,000
- Counties not less than 500,000
- Counties less than 500,000

The first one is expressed in 8 ways, the second in 19 ways, the third in 5 ways, the fourth in one way and the fifth in 14 ways.

This example further illustrates the problem of establishing a dividing line between classes. Should the dividing line between counties with 500,000 and those below be "over 500,000", "at 500,000" or "below 500,000".

This report consists of 2 parts: first, a list of more than 100 categories of population with the reference to the statutory citations to each category or subdivision thereof; and second, a list of all the statutory citations in numerical order with a cross reference to the population category in which found. This study incorporates an analysis of the 1953 statutes and chapters 1 to 618 of the 1955 session laws. Where a citation is followed by an asterisk, the classification appears more than once in the reference. In a few cases where a complete class has been eliminated by a 1955 session law repealing a section, the citation is included with a notation that it was repealed in 1955.
